Melville Douglas Global Growth Fund Ltd - USD Balanced Class

Commentary

After a very disappointing third quarter in global markets, equity markets bounced back strongly in October, with the MSCI AC World index up almost 8% and emerging markets up 7%. A small amount of dollar weakness was helpful but this impact was minimal. Global growth concerns and the possible spill-over effects from a slowing China on developed economies subsided with resultant lower levels of volatility. While the services component of most economies are expanding, activity levels in manufacturing and industrial output globally (except Europe) remain depressed. The drivers for stronger equity markets over the month were supportive remarks from the European Central Bank, stabilisation from China's currency regime, and later in the month positive remarks from the US Federal Reserve relating to the health of the underlying economy as signalled by growth in employment and consumption. The Fed managed to convince markets that the woolly concept of "global volatility" wasn't driving monetary policy and that the Fed was still focused on domestic labour market and inflation conditions – along with a strong reminder that a December interest rate hike was still on the table.

The portfolio grew 5.00% in October, ahead of the benchmark's 3.92% return. The outperformance during the month was the result of an overweight position to equity as well as a credible performance from the underlying funds held in the portfolio.

While the past month has seen a strong recovery in investment returns, the global growth outlook remains uncertain and disjointed. This level of uncertainty on economic progress combined with the first U.S. interest rate hike increases the likelihood of greater volatility in Q415. We believe that cash and fixed income offer investors very little in terms of return and maintain our overweight position to global equity.
