Quarterly Commentary 31 Dec 2015 - 31 Mar 2016

Over the period, the fund underperformed by 0.98%, returning -0.74% compared to the MSCI ACWI benchmark total return of 0.24%.

A flat quarter masked a very volatile start to the year, with double-digit declines by mid-February. There was no shortage of concerns - global growth, the dramatic decline in the oil price, funding questions over emerging market debt and fears of a deflationary spiral from the disorderly devaluation of the Chinese renminbi all weighed on markets over the period.

The sustainability of the recent rally in equity markets is questionable, particularly as the rally was led by lower quality businesses. Our proven long-term investment strategy of investing in high quality companies with good growth prospects will not be influenced by short-term underperformance. Amidst the volatility of the past quarter we have found some attractive opportunities to build new positions in Amazon, MasterCard and Nike which we discuss later.

The primary driver of the underperformance was the limited exposure to energy, utilities and materials sectors. Our positions in health care, industrials, telecommunications and IT all contributed positively to performance. We have reviewed all our underperforming exposures and we remain comfortable with our positions.

Prudential continued to sell off into Q116. We remain convinced that the investment case is intact and we have begun to see some signs of improving sentiment toward the stock. A number of headwinds have plagued Prudential since Q3 2015. In summary, a slow-down in Asia, uncertainty over the impact of fiduciary rules proposed in the U.S., Solvency II capital levels as well as the potential impact of higher credit spreads. Within Asia, concerns focused on the impact of Chinese growth and regional impact including potential actions authorities may take with regard to capital controls.

We invest in the underlying cash flow generation of a business and we believe this is currently unappreciated by the market. We believe Prudential's high cash flow generation is underpinned by the quality of its existing book of business, high recurring and low value premiums in Asia and conservative actuarial assumptions. Notwithstanding short-term concerns, we see little evidence of any material weakening of the stock's solvency and cash flow generation. The long-term Asian growth opportunity remains intact, anchored by franchises in Hong Kong, Singapore, Indonesia and Malaysia. Management delivery of the most consistent dividend track record of its European peers, commitment to a progressive dividend policy and the most recent payment of a special dividend all serve as further confirmation of our stance.

Prudential has performed better of late, buoyed by some positive news flow and data from the results which provided additional comfort around some of the concerns mentioned above. The U.S. 'fiduciary rule' (legislation imposed on financial advisors) was released in early April and was more benign than some had feared, also boosted the stock.
