Additional Information

The second quarter of 2017 was marked by global equities hitting fresh highs on upbeat corporate results, improving economic data and waning political risk in Europe. Stock markets tend to climb a wall of worry and there were a plentiful supply of proverbial bricks and mortar. These include tightening labour markets, President Trump's protectionist agenda, China's credit dependent economy, tensions on the Korean Peninsula and high valuations across most classes. Nonetheless, equities marched on as the baton passed seamlessly from the dwindling immediacy of "Trumpflation" tax cuts to evidence of global economic re-synchronisation and a re-acceleration in corporate profit growth. The co-ordinated uplift in growth has come after a decade of successive shocks rolling across the globe: the financial crisis of 2007-09, Eurozone crisis of 2009-13 and commodity price collapses in 2014-15.

With this simultaneous pick-up of growth in developed markets, most regions have done well. Geographically, the stock market rally over the quarter and year to date was led by European bourses (on an ebbing anti-EU tide) and emerging markets. By contrast, political risk has increased in the US, Brazil and the UK due to self-inflicted actions by their leaders. From a sector perspective the quarter's rally was also broad based, except for an energy sector weighed by the ongoing supply glut. The fund has limited exposure to energy given industry's weak record on capital allocation and return on investment.

Over the period, the fund's investment style proved to be a tailwind, as stocks with high return on capital and steady earnings growth characteristics tended to outperform. Nonetheless, the investment team's efforts also paid off through successful stock picking, particularly within the technology and consumer discretionary sectors. The fund's underweight to the top performing healthcare sector was counterbalanced by our holdings in US managed care, namely UnitedHealth and Anthem.

Outlook

Our expectation is that economic uncertainties will further dissipate. If so, improving underlying fundamentals will be the overriding driver as the rest of the year unfolds. As such, we expect the status quo to prevail, namely equities to eke out moderately better risk adjusted returns than highly priced bonds. The biggest risk to this outlook remains of a geopolitical nature, which has moderated somewhat during the first half of 2017 but can unexpectedly flare up again.

At a stock-level, a reappraisal of President Trump's effectiveness shifted market leadership from industrial and financial cyclicals back to more reliable growth stocks. As befits their name, these stocks can grow under their own steam even under relatively subdued economic conditions. For reasons explained above, our investment style tends to overweight such companies in the fund. We have benefitted year-to-date from this style bias, but such rotations tend to flip-flop in and out of fashion as traders chase the latest trend. The implication being that we will not fully participate during spates of pro-cyclical euphoria when lower quality issues bounce more sharply.

Rather than attempt to chase returns by tactically catching every market mood swing, our objective is to strategically achieve superior risk adjusted returns long term as a result of steady compound returns.
