Total Expense (TER): This ratio shows the charges, levies and fees relating to the management of the portfolio and is expressed as a percentage of the average net asset value of the portfolio, calculated over the period shown and annualised to the most recently completed quarter. A higher TER does not necessarily imply a poor return, nor does a low TER imply a good return. The current TER should not be regarded as an indication of future TERs.

Transaction Costs (TC): This ratio shows the percentage of the value of the fund incurred as costs relating to the buying and selling of the fund's underlying assets. TC are a necessary cost in administering the fund and impacts fund returns. It should not be considered in isolation as returns may be impacted by many other factors over time including market returns, the type of fund, investment decisions of the investment manager and the TER.

Total Investment Charges (TIC): This ratio is simply the sum of the TER and TC, showing the percentage of the value of the fund incurred as costs relating to the investment of the fund. It should be noted that performance figures account for all costs included in the TIC ratio, so you should not deduct the TIC from performance figures, the performance is already net of the TIC.

Fund review

The fund gained ground as global stock markets hit fresh record highs. Moderately positive industry sector allocation relative to the benchmark index was counterbalanced by slightly negative stock selection. There was sufficient exposure to mega-cap technology, specifically semiconductors, to ensure the fund participated in the narrow rally in artificial intelligence-related stocks. It also benefited from relatively lower exposure to “old economy” laggards such as the materials and energy industry sectors.

The top four largest contributors were technology related, namely Taiwan Semiconductor, NVIDIA, Alphabet and Amphenol. MedTech company Boston Scientific also made the top five, fueled by strength in its cardiology interventions. Many of the largest detractors were retail orientated as cash strapped consumers continue to feel the cost-of-living pinch. These included Estee Lauder, LVMH and Starbucks. Chemicals distributor Brenntag was also weak on the back of pricing pressure and sluggish volumes.

Market overview

The artificial intelligence theme has singlehandedly driven markets higher. Almost all the gains in the S&P 500 over the quarter came from AI-related stocks. Most of the current AI capital spending is going towards technical infrastructure, which consists not only of AI-chips but also land, data centres, servers, and networking equipment. An example of a beneficiary is Amphenol, one of the holdings in the fund, which provides high-performance cabling for data centres. Amphenol's AI-related revenue was de minimis at the start of 2023 and is approaching $1 billion today.

It was a mixed picture elsewhere. The hoped-for broadening out of equity returns has yet to materialise, despite an upward trajectory in corporate earnings growth. An overhang this year for stocks outside the tech sector was a hawkish repricing of the Federal Reserve pivot. A potential reprieve came during the quarter with the announcement of lower-than-expected US consumer price inflation, which resurrected hopes of two rate cuts by the end of 2024. The closer we get to cuts, the more they may help to support interest rate sensitive sectors.

Looking ahead

Regarding the impact of technology, Bill Gates has been credited with saying “people overestimate what they can do in one year and underestimate what they can do in 10 years”.

Applying this wisdom to today, there does indeed appear to be plenty of hype bubbling around AI but there are also immediate use cases. For example, boosting Meta's content recommendation algorithm or enhancing Google Search. However, the concern is bridging the expectations gap as revenue generation is still likely to lag this year's huge upfront investments.

Previous technology investment cycles generally lasted one to three years. We are past the first year of this cycle. However, if AI is really the next generation of the internet, expect investment intensity to remain elevated for longer. For the rally to continue into next year we will likely need to see traction that newly developed software applications are being used by real world companies (e.g. banks, healthcare companies, consumer goods, etc) to boost sales or cut costs. For example, for all its potential, we still need to see evidence that Microsoft's copilot tools are being widely adopted by office workers as quickly as initially expected.

If AI proves to be a flash in the pan, it is not an undue concern for the fund. A key linchpin of our philosophy is to diversify growth drivers not only by country and industry sector but also by investment themes. To name a few, these include health and financial innovation, ageing populations, climate change, digitisation, automation, and new ways of consuming and working. Themes will come and go, but our philosophy remains constant.
